Course and curriculum development

Concurrent Certificate in Applied Social Sciences Research, Faculty of Social Sciences, McMaster University. This is a new certificate available to undergraduate social science students to recognize sustained efforts at developing research expertise. I drafted and pitched the initial proposal for this certificate to the Dean and Associate Dean Undergraduate Studies.

POLI SCI 2PF3: The Politics of Funny, McMaster University. This second-year elective course introduces students to political behaviour with an examination of research on the effects of political satire shows, like The Daily Show, on political engagement and participation among young people. It also examines how popular forms of comedy, including stand-up and situation comedies, construct and critique social identities centred around race, national identity, gender, and LGBTQ status.

POLI SCI 4SS3: Public opinion and policy, McMaster University. This fourth-year honour seminar is organized around students' original research and analysis of public opinion surveys to understand the origins of individual support for government redistribution or pro-poor policy. Students present their original research as part of a poster session at the end of the term.

Program Director, Georgia Tech at Monterrey Tec Study Abroad, 2007. Responsible for recruiting students, budget, exchange agreement and program, travel to site visits, in addition to offering course in English to 15 GT students and 5 Monterrey Tec students. Developed and taught course, Contemporary Mexico, as part of the Georgia Tech Study Abroad at Monterrey Tec (Monterrey, NL Mexico).

Senior Seminar and Thesis in Political Economy, Georgia Institute of Technology. An economics professor and I jointly designed this two-semester, team-taught capstone experience for joint majors of Economics and International Affairs. All students completed original research papers and presentations as part of the course requirements.

Latin American Politics and Popular Culture, Georgia Institute of Technology. New undergraduate course taught in English as part of the Georgia Tech Study Abroad in Argentina and Brazil. The course explored political expression through literature, architecture, and art and included site visits to museums, historic, and cultural sites.
